I then want to use the variable olduser in my check_user function. I am new to javascript and jquery. The variable olduser holds a list of ids that are hidden inputs. I need this id list to be updated whenever someone clicks an element with the class "action". My problem is that the check_user function is located in a different file. I cannot write the function in my main file because it is a function that needs to be used by many different elements on a website. When I run the code I get the following error: Uncaught ReferenceError: check_user is not defined How can I make the variable olduser available to my check_user function? A: Because you have defined the function check_user in a separate file, you need to use: include(relative_path_to_file_containing_check_user); at the top of the other file and (function() { //code of function to be included here }); at the bottom. To get back to an easy way to use the function instead of calling it manually, you can use a simple jquery extension that does this for you. This relates generally to
