You can simply use one website, and move forward, and worry about the other later, and get it to work, easy. I have one domain on this server called dom1.com 5:23 pm 939 4:44 pm Baranow Wrote: -- > It is working on a shared server, I have an account with Go Daddy, > and they have shared a server with another person, and that is > why I bought this account and why I am using that domain name and > why the other domain is not working. You do not want to use a domain name that is shared. If you plan to buy the domain name, and then immediately transfer it to another host, you will end up with problems. 8:43 pm Baranow Wrote: -- > That is why I put it in that post and so the other domain is not > working. Try to use a domain name that is not shared. With a shared name, you have no control over who will access that site. The shared server may be busy with other domains, and one or more of them may have scripts on it that are attacking the other. A shared server is an operation mode for the server, and not the domain name, so it is not likely that the other person has done anything with it that prevents the domain name from working. 8:46 pm 939 4:46 pm Baranow Wrote: -- > Yes the domain name is shared with another person, so they have > it, and that is why the other domain is not working, and they > cannot make it work, and I have the right to make it work, and > they cannot make it work, I am the owner of the domain name and I > have purchased the domain name from them, and purchased the domain > name from GoDaddy, and I have purchased this hosting from GoDaddy > with this domain name. Autodesk Robot Structural Analysis Professional 2014,Q: How to extract the Content-Type: text/html from a WebSocket request in Java? What I would like to do: Connect to a WebSocket (non SSL) via Java Read the Content-Type: text/html (because this is always what I get in the last message read) Get the HTML of the page behind the WebSocket I tried the following code but in the end it just returns the HTML as a string. public static void getHtmlOfPageBehindWebSocket(WebSocket webSocket) { try { InputStream is = webSocket.getInputStream(); if (is!= null) { BufferedReader br = new BufferedReader(new InputStreamReader(is)); String s = ""; while ((s = br.readLine())!= null) { System.out.println(s); } } } catch (Exception e) { e.printStackTrace(); } } I searched the web a long time but all I could find were answers which did not help
